The acquisition expands StoneX's agriculture offering with AI-driven technology and grain market intelligence

NEW YORK, Nov. 23, 2026 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- StoneX Group Inc. ("StoneX"; NASDAQ: SNEX) today announced the acquisition of GrainFox Corp. ("GrainFox"), a Canadian agricultural technology and grain marketing platform. The acquisition adds GrainFox's digital capabilities, AI-powered tools, and market intelligence to StoneX's existing agricultural brokerage, advisory and risk management services.

Headquartered in Winnipeg, Manitoba, GrainFox provides digital tools and market intelligence designed to help agricultural producers and agribusinesses make more informed grain marketing decisions. Its platform combines market data and analysis with Sinoa, GrainFox's AI-powered grain market assistant, as well as personalized sales recommendations and farm management tools that account for factors including cash flow, storage, risk and individual business goals.

For StoneX, the strategic acquisition also adds a proven digital platform and an experienced team with deep knowledge of Canadian grain markets. It strengthens the firm's ability to combine technology, market intelligence and advisory expertise across its agricultural offering, while creating additional opportunities to support producers and agribusinesses in North America with more connected tools and insights.

Ryan Turner, Head of Commercial Hedging – North America at StoneX, commented:

"GrainFox has built a strong business by combining smart technology with the kind of market knowledge and personal support that really matters to agricultural clients. That makes it a natural fit for StoneX. We see a real opportunity to bring together GrainFox's digital and AI capabilities with our existing brokerage, advisory and risk management expertise, giving us more ways to help clients make informed decisions in markets that rarely stand still."

Mark Lepp, Founder and CEO of GrainFox, said:

"For more than 20 years, we've been providing producers and commercial businesses the market insights and technology to help them make more informed, confident decisions in the grain market.
