Now in its fourth year, the StoneX Natural Resources Summit brings together a growing network of market participants, corporate executives, investors, analysts, and StoneX experts from across the global natural resources sector. The event is designed to foster meaningful dialogue around the trends, challenges, and opportunities shaping energy, metals, mining, and global commodity markets.

This year's summit will expand on the curated panel discussions and sector-focused programming attendees have come to expect, while also introducing dedicated opportunities for one-to-one meetings with StoneX teams, corporate executives, and industry specialists.

Over the course of two days, attendees will participate in morning networking and meeting sessions followed by afternoon panel discussions featuring leading experts and thought leaders from across the natural resources landscape.

Key themes and session topics will include:

- Fossil fuels, gas, and LNG
- Industrial and precious metals
- Critical minerals and rare earth metals
- Global supply, demand, and trade flows

The summit reflects StoneX's continued commitment to connecting clients and market participants with actionable market intelligence, industry expertise, and relationship-building opportunities across the global commodities ecosystem.

Michael Cuoco, Head of Metals/Bulk Fund Sales, StoneX, commented:

"The Natural Resources Summit has become an important forum for bringing together participants from across the sector to discuss the forces reshaping global commodity markets. As market complexity increases, and current events continue to significantly impact market dynamics, creating opportunities for collaboration and informed discussion amongst the StoneX community becomes even more vital."

Richard Messina, President, Benchmark, a StoneX company, added:

"From energy security and shifting trade alliances to the growing importance of critical minerals and supply chain resilience, geopolitical developments are increasingly influencing natural resources markets worldwide.
